IT'S ALL HAPPENING

We're jacked and pumped for what could be the biggest weekend in Boston sports history. 19-20

WELCOME TO WKND

MATT BURKE, SPORTS EDITOR

Sunday night will be special as the Red Sox will play Game 2 of the ALCS at Fenway Park at the same time the Patriots will be playing the undefeated Kansas City Chiefs 30 miles to the south. It's just a shame that MLB and TBS can't reschedule the start time for the Sox game. I mean, the network had to have known there was a chance the Red Sox would make it this far. You'll survive if you bump one or two reruns of "The Big Bang Theory," TBS. For more on the Sox and Pats, please see Pages 19-20 and metro.us.

How climate change is fueling a 'Lobster War' between Maine and Canada

A new documentary explores the conflict and the lobster industry's bleak future.

MATT JUUL

"Lobster War" screens at the Coolidge Corner Theatre this weekend. COURTESY OF "LOBSTER WAR"

Climate change, increased lobster populations and a centuries-old land dispute have created a perfect storm, fanning the flames of war between lobster fishermen in Maine and Canada.

"Lobster War," a documentary by award-winning Boston Globe reporter David Abel and filmmaker Andy Laub, explores how this conflict came about and why it may only get worse as global temperatures continue to rise.

The film, which premieres in Massachusetts at the closing night of the GlobeDocs Film Festival on Sunday, takes a deep dive into the tensions caused by 277 square miles of disputed waters — dubbed the gray zone — off the coast of Machias Seal Island. While the issue over whether the strip of land belongs to Maine or New Brunswick dates back to the Revolutionary War, its ambiguous status has led to spats in recent years between American and Canadian lobster fishermen working in the gray zone.

Abel says incidents of sabotage and threats of violence have seemingly increased as more and more fishermen from both sides jockey for the perfect fishing spots in hopes of capitalizing on the region's rising lobster populations.

"The concern is, we don't really know, and it could get worse as more people seek to fish in that area," says Abel. "It doesn't seem like either side, either the Canadian government or the American government, really wants to pursue a political solution to this."

The land dispute wasn't a major issue for fishermen in the area until recently, as the Gulf of Maine's rising temperatures have led to growth in the lobster population. According to the film, Maine caught a record 132 million pounds of lobster in 2016 — double the amount from 2000 — worth more than half a billion dollars, nearly three times the 2000 haul. Meanwhile, the Gulf of Maine has warmed faster than 99 percent of the global ocean area in the last decade.

While the lobster boom is a "good news story" for now, Abel notes that it's very likely that the continued effects of climate change and rising sea temperatures will eventually lead to a decline in the crustacean's population in the region. Lobster fisheries south of Cape Cod have already experienced a devastating collapse, as the catch in the area has fallen by 90 percent, costing hundreds of lobstermen their jobs.

"The problem is that the warming temperatures are increasing and unlikely to be reversed, especially given our pulling out of the Paris climate accord and lack of any national effort to try to reduce climate change," Abel explains. "If the lobster population north of Portland, Maine, crashes — and some people fear it could — that could be incredibly devastating for the economy of Maine, which has become more and more reliant on the lobster fishery.

"Climate change is not some distant, abstract threat," he adds. "It's having a real impact on our lives today. This film, in my eyes, captures how the rapid warming we're seeing in our region is playing a role in exacerbating a conflict and potentially threatening one of its greatest resources."

You don't know Bill Belichick

Tony La Russa gives us a peek at another side of the Patriots head coach. MATT JUUL

Most people only know one version of Bill Belichick, the no-nonsense side of the hoodie-wearing head coach who stares daggers from the sidelines and offers only curt responses to reporters.

Sure, his public persona can be a bit prickly at times, but that's only when he's in front of the cameras. According to his pal Tony La Russa, Belichick is actually kind of a sweetheart.

"Most people know him from the press conferences and his demeanor during the games," La Russa tells Metro. "I always think that they would welcome and be really impressed with how human he is."

"He has no ego, he doesn't walk around like, 'Hey, I'm a big shot,'" adds the former Cardinals manager. "He is absolutely entertaining, funny, smart."

La Russa, now a fellow member of the Boston sports community after joining the Red Sox as vice president and special assistant to Dave Dombrowski, will reunite with Belichick this weekend at the 5th annual Hall of Fame Huddle. Hosted by the Bill Belichick Foundation, Friday's event will feature an intimate discussion about sports and more with former Yankees manager Joe Torre and Hall of Fame slugger Jim Thome, as well as raise funds to support student athletes across the nation.

La Russa became friends with Belichick thanks to "Friday Night Lights" author Buzz Bissinger, a former classmate of the Patriots head coach, while working together on the book "Three Nights in August." Bissinger was inspired to introduce La Russa to Belichick as he thought they had a lot in common and "would hit it off."

"He made the introduction and it's one of the nicest things that's happened to me," La Russa recalls. "Our friendship is very special to me."

As a coach, La Russa has nothing but praise for his friend, noting how he has the unique ability to form special bonds with each and every person on his roster and staff.

Tony La Russa and Bill Belichick.
ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

"This is something I've appreciated and learned from," says La Russa. "Bill doesn't talk about it publicly, but he starts with building a relationship on a personal and professional basis."

As someone who's led three different World Series-winning squads over the years, La Russa knows just how hard it is to consistently field championship caliber teams each season. That's why he's been blow away by Belichick's ability to win with the Patriots year after year.

"It's hard to win once, but to repeat that winning formula relentlessly, that goes beyond the credit that you can give," La Russa says. "Whether it's a player you can't reach, or even as a coach, you have one year where you just lose an edge, but not with Bill."

But most of all, La Russa admires Belichick for his humility and sense of humor off the field.

"He's more going to ask about you then he's going to be talking," says La Russa."You really got to push him to talk about himself."

"When somebody says something funny, he laughs as hard as anybody," he adds. "I think that's a side I gladly share because people can, I hope, trust me and know Bill's a really good guy. He's a great friend."

Head back to the '60s with Jon Hamm this weekend.

ALL PHOTOS KIMBERLEY FRENCH / TWENTIETH CENTURY FOX

'Bad Times' with Drew Goddard

The writer and director opens up about his '60s crime epic.

GREGORY WAKEMAN

Over the last decade, Drew Goddard has been one of the few filmmakers to avoid superheroes and sequels and still get mainstream movies made.

He has written "Cloverfield," "World War Z" and "The Martian," as well as writing and directing "The Cabin in the Woods," which have made over $1.4 billion combined while costing just over $353 million to make. So it is little surprise that, considering his seemingly innate ability to recognize and make what moviegoers want to see, 20th Century Fox greenlit "Bad Times at the El Royale," a crime noir set in 1969 that revolves around a priest (Jeff Bridges), a vacuum cleaner salesman (Jon Hamm), a mysterious hippie (Dakota Johnson) and a singer (Cynthia Erivo) checking into a novelty hotel, all with their own ulterior motives.

But rather than admitting to possessing some sort of cinematic clairvoyance, Goddard says, "Every movie I have ever made has felt like a bad idea at the time.

"I remember when we tried to make 'Cloverfield' people thought it was insane. Same with 'The Martian.' I have always tried to write and make something I wanted to watch," says Goddard. "I have always been lucky in that regard. With this, I just wanted to make a big ensemble movie about the '60s and have some fun with it. I just trusted that if I wanted to do it, other people would want to do it and all of the studios were excited by it."

But how did Goddard get started on and develop "Bad Times at the El Royale"?

"It started with the very simple attitude, 'Make the movie you would want to watch.' I love crime cinema and fiction. I have been intoxicated with film noir all of my life and I just wanted to play around with it. It started with that," says Goddard. "It started with the simple concept of a hotel on the border of California and Nevada on one night in 1969 and what if a whole bunch of disreputable characters checked in at the same time. What kind of chaos would then unfold and then I just let the characters guide the story.

"I don't try to be bold or not be bold. It is all instinct, I suppose. It is important when you are being an artist to be fearless and not be afraid to fail," he adds. "I just want to make a story that I haven't seen before and then see where the characters take me. That tends to lead to good results."

"Bad Times at the El Royale" opens Oct. 12.

Chris Hemsworth has another shirtless moment in "Bad Times at the El Royale."

Michiel Huisman on the true horror of 'The Haunting of Hill House'

The "Game of Thrones" alum talks about the new Netflix adaptation of the Shirley Jackson horror classic. ANDREW HUSBAND

Several years have passed since Daenerys Targaryen (Emilia Clarke) sailed for Westeros in "Game of Thrones" season 6, leaving her then-lover, Daario Naharis (Michiel Huisman) behind. Whether the latter will reappear in the hit HBO program's final season remains to be seen. Yet that doesn't mean the Dutch actor hasn't been keeping busy.

On Friday, he joins an impressive ensemble cast in Netflix's "The Haunting of Hill House," the latest adaptation of the acclaimed 1959 gothic horror by author Shirley Jackson. Two films, both titled "The Haunting," have tried to tell the psychologically dense tale. With Huisman's new 10-episode series, however, it seems simple tricks like jump scares have been traded in for a much deeper sense of dread.

"I thought that wrapping the scares in more of a psychological drama would be very interesting," says Huisman. "Our show plays with the idea that, for the longest time, we really don't know whether everything we see and experience is only happening in the minds of our characters, or if it's actually the power of a building. In this case, the Hill House."

Huisman plays Steven Crain, the oldest of the Crain children who famously survived living in the titular haunted house. He has largely moved past his family's traumas by cashing in on the experience by becoming an acclaimed author. In a sense, he has betrayed his family by selling them out.

"He's basically with his back against the wall," says Huisman. "He finally has everything he has ever wanted – the career, the house, all of it. But in order to achieve all of that, he basically had to sell out by writing a book about their childhood trauma. As a result, his brothers and sisters hate him for it."

This family dynamic is a new edition to the "Hill House" story, for aside from giving the surname to the man who built the house, Jackson's novel doesn't explore this topic. Instead, the Netflix series owes this contribution to its creator, Mike Flanagan, who previously wrote and directed "Oculus" and "Gerald's Game."

"On most of the TV shows I've worked on, there's either a different director for every episode or three or four directors who do the show in blocks," Huisman says. "When you have one director doing everything as Mike did, it all of a sudden becomes something different. It's like you're making one long movie."

The actor admits that this is the first time he has ever experienced a production like "Hill House," on which Flanagan not only wrote and directed, but also served as executive producer and editor.

"It's not unique, but this was the first time for me," Huisman says of the series' leader before stifling a laugh. "It's a lot for anyone to do. I mean, I do not understand how this guy pulled it off without dying of espresso and pizza. That, and lots of candy."

WAIT A MINUTE
You know what's annoying? Subway riders who get up from their seats and book it to the door – before the train has even arrived at the station. Nobody wants to miss their stop, but trying to squeeze through a crowded train in motion is a recipe for disaster. Whatever happened to patience? Everyone's got to get somewhere. There's no need to push through others, many of whom are getting off at the same stop as you. The only thing worse is people who try to get on a train before letting the people already on exit, but that's a grumble for another day.

Aries Stick to the people you know you can trust. Getting together with a former co-worker will lead to an interesting suggestion. Nurture an important relationship.

Taurus You'll be drawn to a partnership that encourages you to do things differently. What you learn from someone with more experience will lead to new beginnings.

Gemini Take the time to listen and find out where others stand before you jump into something risky. Physical activities will help you blow off steam. Tidy up loose ends.

Cancer Settle in and get things done. Personal changes will turn out well, and relationships with children and loved ones will flourish if you offer encouragement and help.

Leo Don't let anger ruin your day. Treat others the way you want to be treated, and be willing to bend in order to get things done.

Virgo Travel, communication and personal growth are all featured. If you sign up for a retreat or self-improvement seminar, the people you meet will change your perspective on life.

Libra Find a way to make a difference. If you offer your time, skills or a kind word, you'll find a way to bring positive change to your life as well.

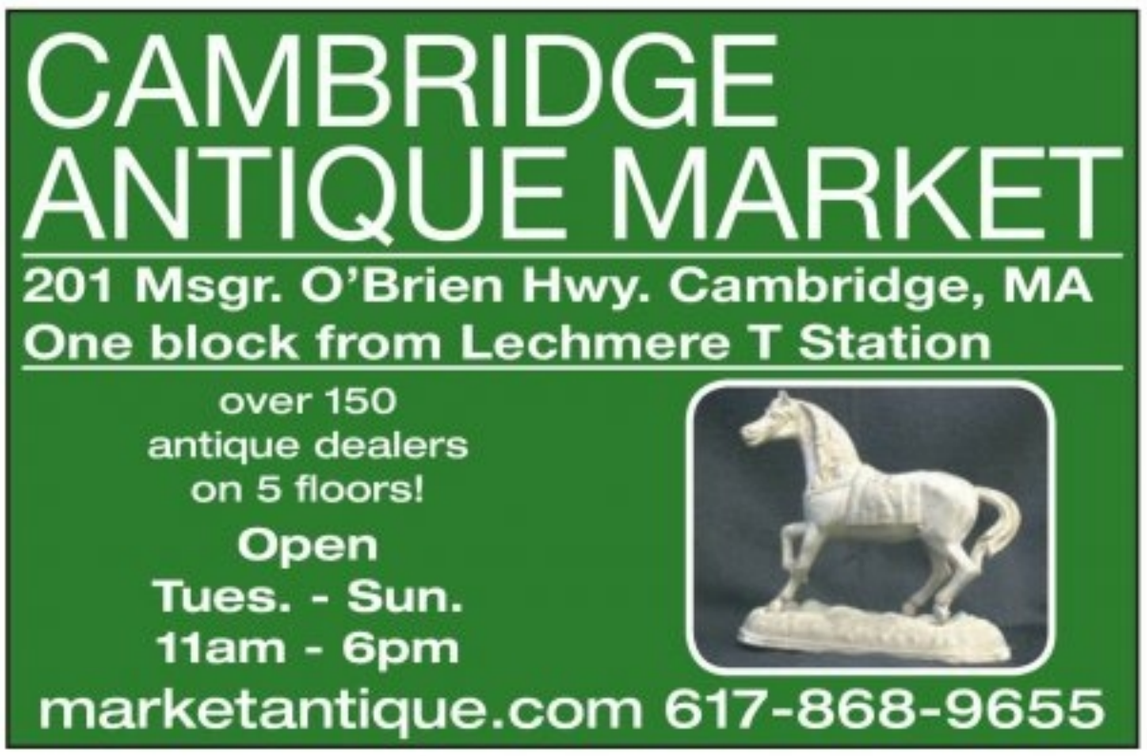
Scorpio Think outside the box. Be innovative and proactive when handling sensitive situations. Personal growth will lead to a positive change. Love is on the rise.

Sagittarius Consider the sort of changes you'd like to see happen before you make your move. If you look out for the underdog, you'll get some surprising help.

Capricorn A change to how you do things will make others take notice. Your dedication and hard work will pay off, and the support you receive will give you hope and added vitality.

Aquarius Listen and assess situations cautiously. Don't be too open about your plans or opinions. It's in your best interest to find out where everyone else stands before you make a commitment.

Pisces Sail into whatever new venture attracts you. Share your ideas and push for what you want to see happen. Financial gain and long-term contracts look promising. Romance is highlighted. EUGENIA LAST



State gets high scores for LGBTQ equality

Even after Massachusetts scored highly on the HRC's Municipal Equality Index, a transgender protection bill is still at risk.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Ten Massachusetts cities received a collective average score of 88 on the Human Rights Campaign's Municipal Equality Index, compared to the national average of 58. GETTY IMAGES

Massachusetts made history as the first state to legalize same-sex marriage in 2004, and it's still making itself known as a state that values LGBTQ equality, according to the Human Rights Campaign.

The Human Rights Campaign released this week its seventh annual Municipal Equality Index, an evaluation of how inclusive an area's laws, policies and services are to LGBTQ residents.

The 2018 report looks at 509 cities across the country, rating them on criteria like nondiscrimination protections, city services and what sort of relationship city officials have with the LGBTQ community. Cities were given a score between 0 and 100, with 100 signifying the most LGBTQ-friendly cities.

Ten Massachusetts cities were evaluated for the Human Rights Campaign index: Amherst, Arlington, Boston, Cambridge, Lowell, Northampton, Provincetown, Salem, Springfield and Worcester. Together these cities averaged 88 points — higher than the national average of 58.

Six cities received perfect scores: Boston, Cambridge, Northampton, Provincetown, Salem and Worcester. Arlington was close behind, with 98. And out of the 10 Massachusetts cities evaluated, Lowell was deemed the least friendly to the LGBTQ community, with a Human Rights Campaign rating of 48.

Why is LGBTQ equality important in Massachusetts and beyond?

"In this political moment, as we face unprecedented challenges to fairness, justice, and democracy at the federal level, we look to local leadership to advance equality for the LGBTQ community," said Rebecca Isaacs, executive director of the Equality Federation Institute, in a statement. "Equality Federation is committed to our partnership with HRC on the Municipal Equality Index because it sets a bar that most localities want to reach."

Since the Municipal Equality Index began in 2012, the number of cities earning perfect scores has "increased by more than sevenfold," according to the Human Rights Campaign, and today at least 25 million people live in cities that have more comprehensive, transgender-inclusive non-discrimination laws than their state.

But at the same that Massachusetts is being praised for its LGBTQ-friendly policies, a battle is unfolding across the state that could threaten one. Question 3 on the November ballot will ask residents if they want to keep the Transgender Anti-Discrimination Law on the books.

Boston fitness startup seeks to change how we row

Hydrow is bringing live-streaming and on-demand workouts to rowing, including its just-completed rows on the Charles and Hudson rivers.

JEFF TOMKO
letters@metro.us

Adam Randall and Dani Hansen have so far rowed the Charles and Hudson Rivers. ALL PHOTOS LUCAS FLORES PIRAN

It's right around Minute 18 of a 20-minute rowing session — in workout terms, it's that final all-out heart rate-elevating push to the end.

Rowers Dani Hansen and Adam Randall are the instructors for this workout — a workout that isn't actually being held in any gym studio, but instead being filmed along the heavily congested Hudson River, and during morning rush hour of all times. The instructional is part of a digital on-demand workout series being developed by row machine startup Hydrow, which is billing itself as the "Peloton of rowing."

With at times gale-force wind conditions that would suck the wind out of most fit gymgoers attempting the same workout, these two world-class aquatic athletes are simultaneously instructing stroke form and tempo with the vocal demeanor of excited Beantown tourists while fighting the Hudson's crashing waves to keep their offshore racing double (a rowing insider's term for rowing vessel) upright.

"It's getting a little choppy out here," Dani Hansen, a U.S. Paralympic silver medalist and Boston resident, can be heard telling the camera crew tailing her from another boat. "But this is so awesome. I wish my mom could see this."

The breathtaking backdrop of the city skyline at sunrise — from One World Trade to the Statue of Liberty — neutralizes any of the Hudson's inherent dangers for the duo.

Using part-cameras, part-courage, and a whole ton of muscle, Hydrow's workout is an attempt to make a more visually appealing addition to the popular and competitive at-home digital workout market. The high winds provided an example as to the physical challenges rowing requires.

"If regular civilians were out there it could have been catastrophic," says Bruce Smith, a former U.S. rowing team coach and creator of the Hydrow. "Most people would get washed out of the boat because they'd get buried in a wave. The fact that Dani and Adam could keep the boat moving and in the right direction while providing instructions just shows what tremendous athletes they are."

response for the Boston-based startup has been overwhelmingly positive, Smith says. Hydrow surpassed its fundraising goal of $100,000 in just four minutes on fundraising site Indiegogo, and is now approaching the half-million-dollar mark.

The boomerang-shaped rower's success comes primarily on its potential to be the first row machine to offer live-streaming and on-demand workout programming when it begins shipping in 2019 (that, and its current price tag of $1,299). The Hydrow will also offer a real-time leaderboard for rowers to compete against other row athletes around the world, a first of its kind.

And Hydrow claims to offer a much quieter row, so you'll be able to hear the waves of the Hudson without getting splashed.

Instead, you may drown at home in your own sweat — rowing is the ultimate total-body workout, using close to 85 percent of the body's muscles to burn up to 300 calories per 30-minute workout, more than cycling and running.

"One of the great things about rowing is that you can do hard or light strokes at any stroke rate," says Randall, a member of the U.S. national rowing team. "It's about how hard you're gonna pull. If you're rowing fast and pulling hard, that's a hard workout. But you can pull slower and still get in a strong workout."

However, not everyone could (or should) drop their oars in the Hudson — or even Boston's Charles River, which was the location for the five-person crew's (including videographer William Huber and producer Chris Sammartano) first on-water video workout shoot. Everyone agreed the calmer waters of the Charles were less of a challenge than the wind-engulfed Hudson.

"Going toward the Statue of Liberty, our rhythm was pretty good," Hansen says. "On the way back, we did have to adjust our stroke rate, because the current was against us. We had anticipated it, but we originally wanted to go a little higher."

At the end of the row, Hansen compared this sightseeing workout with winning a silver medal at the 2016 Paralympic Games in Rio.

"This may have been the coolest thing I have ever done," she says.

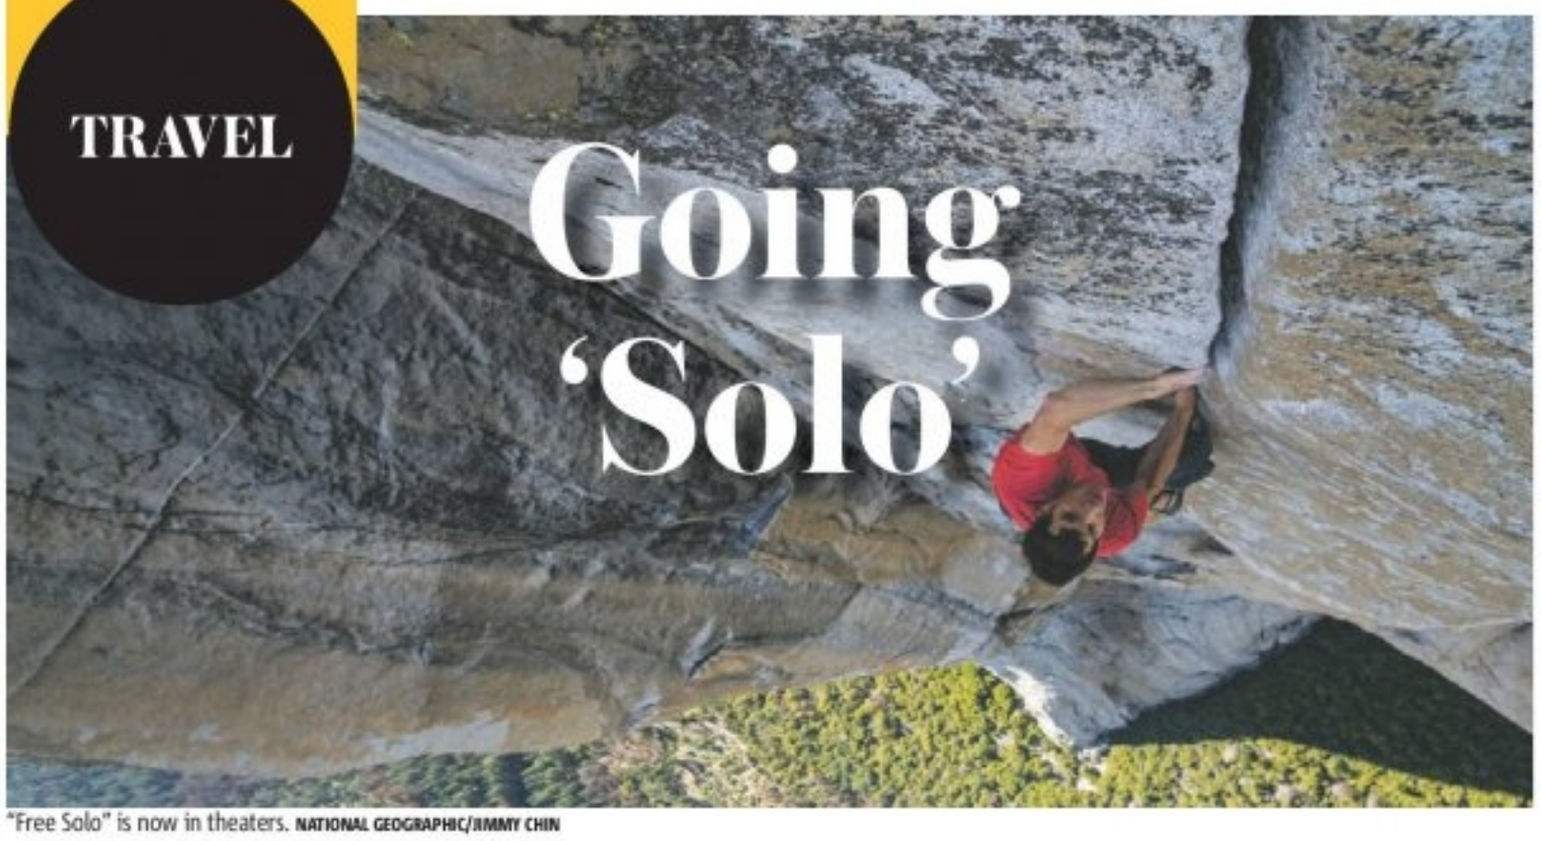
Going 'Solo'



"Free Solo" is now in theaters. NATIONAL GEOGRAPHIC/JIMMY CHIN

"Free Solo" star Alex Honnold shares his favorite places to climb around the world.

matthew.juul@metro.us

Rock climbing isn't for the faint of heart, especially if you plan on scaling a mountain without any ropes or harnesses. However, if you're Alex Honnold, it's just a typical day at work.

The acclaimed climber – who always seems to keep his cool – is the subject of the new documentary, "Free Solo," which chronicles his historic ascent up El Capitan in Yosemite National Park. Honnold is the only person to ever climb the tower-ing formation free-solo style.

"That's one of the best days of my life," Honnold says of his journey up the "big frickin' wall." "Watching in all its glory on the big screen is kind of amazing."

For anyone who wants to get into climbing, Honnold suggests starting out at a climbing gym, a place he called home for eight years before tackling the outdoors. He also encourages beginners to hone their technique and work on their skills prior to making the leap to more adventurous climbs.

"Anyone who's even remotely interested in climbing, I would encourage them to go to the climbing gym and try," says Honnold. "And I always tell beginners to focus on their footwork, focus on their technique and body position, how they move as opposed to just being strong. It's all about learning how to be a good climber, how to move well."

Once you've mastered the basics, you might want to plan a trip to one of Honnold's favorite climbing locations around the globe – just make sure to stay safe and use the appropriate gear, especially if you're a beginner.

Patagonia

Honnold has a lot of love for the beautiful Patagonia region.

"Doing the Fitz Traverse with Tommy Caldwell in Patagonia. Basically we climbed these seven summits… in Argentina. It was amazing," he says. "It was like a four-and-a-half backpacking trip with Tommy, except that it's up vertical rock faces for four days. It was really cool."

"In the same place, I did a traverse at these other four summits behind that with another partner Colin Hayley, the Torre Traverse, in a day and that was also big adventure," Honnold adds. "I like climbs that provide a big experience where at the end you're like, 'Whoa. I can't believe we did that.'"

Yosemite

Of course, Yosemite is another favorite, but it's definitely not suited for newbies to the game.

"Yosemite is one of the best climbing areas in the world, hands down," says Honnold. "And it's an American treasure. It's a really special place. But to really appreciate Yosemite, I feel like you have to be, not an experienced climber, but have some degree of skill, just because it's big walls."

Northeast U.S.

While the west coast climber doesn't do too much exploring in the northeast, he does have a few suggestions for adventurers in our neck of the woods, such as the the Shawangunk Mountains, the Adirondacks and Rumney.

BET OF THE DAY

You typically don't want to bet on public teams like Notre Dame, but it's looking like the Irish will cover that 21-point spread pretty easily at home against a brutal Pittsburgh team. Consider that Pitt was shredded by Penn State at home earlier this season, 51-6. And that Notre Dame has won by 21 points in each of the last three weeks. — MATT BURKE

Sox set for Astros in ALCS

After finishing the Yankees, the Sox now prep to face the reigning World Series champions.

JULIAN EDLOW
sports@metro.us

The Red Sox are riding high after an impressive ALDS victory over the Yankees in four games, with the last two wins coming in the Bronx. They'll need their rest, though, as the defending World Series Champion Houston Astros will be in Boston for Game 1 of the ALCS on Saturday night at Fenway Park.

Here are three keys for the Red Sox if they're going to win this seven-game series and earn a trip to the World Series:

1. Getting early leads

The Astros swept a very talented Indians team in three games in the ALDS, winning the series by a run-total of 21-6. When the Red Sox score first, they do a terrific job of holding on for the win — getting on the scoreboard first in all three of their playoff victories over the Yankees.

This Houston pitching rotation will make it tough on Boston. The foursome of Justin Verlander, Gerrit Cole, Dallas Keuchel and Charlie Morton is as good as you'll find in baseball, and Morton (who likely only starts Game 4) is the only one who allows a career batting average above .252 to these Boston bats.

That said, in six starts against the Red Sox this season, the foursome only earned the win in two of the outings — although Houston came back in some of them and went 4-3 against Boston in the regular season. All four posted a higher ERA against Boston than they did during the regular season, so this lineup's shown they can be better than elite pitching. Time to make it count in the postseason.

2. Betts needs to step up

J.D. Martinez wasted no time putting his stamp on the ALDS, smashing a three-run homer onto the Green Monster in the bottom of the first inning of Game 1. But where has Mookie Betts been?

Betts is just 3-for-16 (.188 average) so far in these playoffs, and although he does have a double, three walks and three runs, a chunk of that was gravy with an eventual 16-1 Game 3 victory already put away. Mookie's 26-for-68 (.382 average) against this Houston pitching staff, including 12 extra-base hits (2 HR), 11 RBI and 14 walks. Let's see that Mookie Betts show up with a trip to the Fall Classic on the line.

ALCS schedule

Saturday: Game 1 at Boston (8:09 p.m., TBS)

Sunday: Game 2 at Boston (7:09 p.m., TBS)

Tuesday: Game 3 at Houston (TBA)

Wednesday: Game 4 at Houston (TBA)

*Thursday, Oct. 18: Game 5 at Houston (TBA)

*Saturday, Oct. 20: Game 6 at Boston (TBA)

*Sunday, Oct. 21: Game 7 at Boston

*If necessary

3. David Price's role

We all know Price's postseason struggles by now. The Game 2 loss at Fenway was the lefty's 10th career playoff start, yet he remains winless — a claim no other pitcher in the history of baseball can make.

Although the Sox lost to the 'Stros in four games during last year's ALDS, Price played a major role in keeping his team in the series with his work out of the bullpen. Price came in as a middle reliever in two games, going 6.2 scoreless innings and allowing just five hits.

Price has only pitched strictly out of the bullpen in two of the nine postseasons he's played in. The other one? That'd be a 2008 run to the World Series as a rookie for the Rays, when he made five appearances and posted a mere 1.59 ERA.

While Price has already been announced by Alex Cora as Sunday's Game 2 starter against Houston, let's see if Cora transitions him to a bullpen role as the series progresses.

3 Things to watch for as Pats take on the undefeated Chiefs

Kansas City is the talk of the NFL, sporting a 5-0 record.

JULIAN EDLOW
sports@metro.us

Sunday Night Football brings us the game of the year thus far when the 5-0 Kansas City Chiefs visit the 3-2 New England Patriots in this Week 6 showdown. While Patrick Mahomes has been the talk of the NFL this season, Tom Brady and the Pats have hit their stride the last two weeks. So how will things play out on Sunday evening?

Here are three things to watch for Sunday (8:20 p.m., NBC) in Foxborough:

Will offense continue to grow?

The Patriots have put up 38 points in consecutive games now, and it's no coincidence with the way they've been adding pieces to their offense. After beginning his career with two duds, first-round pick Sony Michel has been much improved in his last two outings, topping 100 total yards and scoring a touchdown in each game.

Josh Gordon was quiet in his debut two weeks ago against the Dolphins, but caught both his targets for 32 yards while playing on 18 snaps. While Gordon played just 18 snaps again in Week 5, Tom Brady was clearly more comfortable with his new weapon, targeting Gordon four times. Gordon caught two passes again, this time for 50 yards, but the highlight was a 34-yard score on a broken play. TB12 and the former all-pro receiver showed terrific chemistry on the play, and Gordon's freakish athletic ability to locate the ball and fight for it through double coverage was on display. With 10 days of work between games, this could be the matchup we see Gordon unveiled in a larger role.

Julian Edelman returned from his four-game suspension in Week 5, and it looked like he and Brady hadn't missed a beat. The slot receiver played on 48-of-69 snaps (70 percent), and hauled in 7-of-9 targets for 57 yards. It wasn't a jaw-dropping performance, but it was vintage Edelman, which was comforting to see.

Tom Brady and the Patriots are set to take on Kansas City this Sunday night. GETTY IMAGES

Whom will Pats defense allow to hurt them?

As bad as the Chiefs defense is, their offense is that much better, averaging 35 points per game — as you'd imagine from their undefeated record. Mahomes has taken the league by storm, and has proven he doesn't get rattled on the road — 11 touchdowns with zero interceptions through three games away from home.

The gunslinger's play is only enhanced by all the talent around him in the passing game. Tyreek Hill might be the most dangerous big-play threat in the NFL, and while he's remained relatively quiet since Week 1, he's still averaging over 15 yards per catch and over five yards per carry. Travis Kelce is the best tight end in the NFL not named Gronk, and is as consistent as they come — 78-plus yards in each of his last four games.

The "lesser" weapons are just as scary when you consider they're third and fourth options in this offense. Sammy Watkins is a former first-rounder who's compiled at least 78 yards or a touchdown in each of his three healthy games this season, while running back Kareem Hunt led the NFL in rushing yards as a rookie last season.

The bottom line is that someone in this offense is going to have a big game, even if the Patriots are going to emerge victorious. Bill Belichick's style of coaching has always been dictating which players he'll let hurt him, and which ones he feels the need to blanket.

Which defense can make a play late?

The over/under in this game is set at 59 points, which is the highest projected total of the NFL season. The over has hit in six of the last seven matchups between Belichick and Chiefs' head coach Andy Reid, so this game has me thinking it could be a lot like Super Bowl LII — in which the Eagles topped the Pats by a score of 41-33.

What made the difference in that game? Brandon Graham's strip sack of Brady with just about two minutes left that got the Eagles the ball back with the lead. This has the potential to be the type of shootout where neither offense can be stopped all game. Whichever team digs deep for a late play on defense could earn the win.

NFL WEEK 6: Chiefs have thrived as underdogs

Patrick Mahomes leads a sizzling Chiefs offense. GETTY IMAGES

MetroBet looks at where you should place your money this weekend.

Kansas City Chiefs at New England Patriots (-3.5)

This Sunday night AFC showdown between the Chiefs and Patriots promises to be a barnburner, as the betting total was set at a stratospheric 59 points.

Undefeated Kansas City is also a perfect 5-0 against the spread this year. Patrick Mahomes has been a revelation under center, and the young signal caller has demonstrated plenty of poise on the road. He's tossed 11 TD passes away from Arrowhead Stadium and has yet to allow an INT. New England's shoddy defense should hardly be able to contain Tyreek Hill and Kareem Hunt in this one, as the Chiefs are fourth in the NFL in yards per play.

The Patriots' offense appears to be rounding into form after two straight 38-point outputs by Tom Brady and company. The Chiefs' stoppers have been largely ineffective all season, ranking 19th in points per game allowed, 24th in rushing yards per game allowed, and 31st in passing yards per game allowed. New England has also trended well at home, covering in nine of their last 10 at Gillette Stadium.

However, Kansas City has been incredible in the underdog role, covering in seven of their last eight contests. And it's worth noting that the favorite is 1-7-1 ATS in the last nine Sunday night games, per oddsshark.com.

The pick: Chiefs +3.5
